

What's going on:

You and these plants have something in common: you both are mostly made of salty water, which can store and share electricity. When you approach or touch a plant, you can slightly alter its electrical field, which triggers a sensor that turns on music. Besides being able to connect with them electrically, what else do we have in common with plants?